He is, as most sailors go, an old salt “In the central North Pacific Gyre, pieces of plastic outweigh surface zooplankton by a factor of 6 to 1,” according to a report based on Moore’s research.. these land masses would fit into the Pacific basin with a space the size of Pacific garbage patches' of.. This rubbish- strewn patch floats within the North Pacific Gyre, the center of a series of currents several thousand miles wide that create a circular effect, ensnaring trash and debris.

I had never been so excited to see garbage in my life I was actually giddy After flying from Los Angeles to the Big Island of Hawaii, I hitched a ride on the research vessel Alguita as it did a shakedown cruise, readying to set sail to traverse the massive Eastern Garbage Patch, which lies between there and California.

But don’t for a second think that its mass isn’t substantial Its sprawl may cover an area as much as one and a half times? Moore, 6 1, is a scruffy sea captain whose blue eyes are both sad and keen His salt- and- pepper hair is typically covered by an odd- fitting hat (“Die Trying” emblazoned across its brow).. Around and around: bottles, plastic bags, fishnets, clothing, lighters, and myriad other man- made items, held until they disintegrate, make their way to distant seas, or merely bob among the waves before washing up on someone’s beach.. The foundation’s fieldwork has revealed an ever- growing synthetic sea where particles concentrate by season, trash commutes in the currents from far- off places, and plastic outweighs zooplankton, retarding ocean life.. But because this rubbish is in the ocean, it drifts Fragments peel off here and there; some of it drops to the ocean floor.. Fascinating stuff Captain Charles Moore founded the Algalita foundation and commands its research vessel, the Alguita.. Maddeningly similar names, I know)Moore first discovered the garbage patch when he crossed the Pacific in 1.. His findings have gone a long way toward educating the science community, if not yet the public, on the magnitude of marine pollution and its impact on life—all life. ae05505a44
